Buidling Brains Holiday Camp December 21-23 & December 26-30. 9 am-4 pm. BUILDING BRAINS uses LEGO Duplo and K'NEX educational kits to BUILD math and science skills. These educational building kits have specially designed gears, levers and pulleys that teach students to build simple machines that really work. Our students will BUILD simple machines while BUILDING fine motor skills and confidence. Classes are designed to reinforce classroom curriculum. Students use colors, sizes and shapes to correctly build a simple machine and then perform a scientific experiment to see how it works. In each class students will build a new and exciting machine and watch it work! Literacy skills are improved by memorizing poems with hand motions about gears, levers and pulleys to reinforce how they work and what they do. Classes are progressive and BUILD on one another. This is the next Generation of Critical thinking toys! We wrap our hands and our head around a problem.

Jordan Merecka was born with multiple congenital heart defects, including Dextrocardia (his heart was on the wrong side of his chest). As a child, he experienced two open chest surgeries. Later, he received several surgical revisions and an implantable defibrillator. For many years after his early surgeries, Jordan was able to live an active childhood. As a teen, he enjoyed hunting and fishing with his father; and at school, he participated in FFA (Future Farmers of America). But, in September 2010, Jordan's heart began to fail, and he was placed on a waiting list for a heart transplant. With medical treatment, he was able to attend school as he waited. At the start of 2011, the senior at Cypress Woods High School was looking forward to three major milestones in his life: his prom on May 27, his eighteenth birthday on May 29 and his graduation on June 5. In April 2011, his health took a turn for the worse and he was admitted to Texas Children's Hospital with heart failure symptoms and kidney insufficiency. He critically needed a heart transplant. Over the weekend of May 21, all of his organs began to fail acutely and he could not breath on his own because his heart was so weak. On May 22,

GIRL SCOUT

Submitted by Melinda Riso

Junior Girl Scouts earn a Stress Less badge by completing requirements that teach them about ways to relax.

SOME OF THE ACTIVITIES INCLUDE:

- Creating a personal stress kit that includes books, photographs, cartoons, music, a card or letter from a friend or relative, photo or picture from a magazine of a peaceful place.
- Find a peaceful place in your home to relax and de-stress.
- Learn how to identify your feelings and moods by writing your feelings down.
- Do for others - is the best way to lesson your stress and focus on someone else.
- Listen to music.
- Read and Relax. Following a character's adventures can help you forget about your stress.
- Move that stress away – Physical motion can release the tension in your body.
- Practice elevator breathing – Deep, focused breathing can refresh your mind – inhale and exhale slowly.

TEN TIPS FOR HELPING CHILDREN DEAL WITH STRESS

With news and conversations full of disaster, war and terrorism, children and teens may be feeling stressed and need you to help them cope. Children and teens may not have the combination of life experiences and critical thinking skills that can help adults deal with tragedy. But young people are generally resilient. These ten tips can help you recognize the signs of stress and prevent an overload of stress in young people.

1. Recognize that children handle stress in different ways. Some show a regression in behavior – acting younger, more fearful, clingier. Outbursts of anger and aggression are also signals at all ages. A child or teen who withdraws or who seems constantly sad or has trouble sleeping or shows significant changes in appetite may also be showing signs of stress.

2. Encourage conversation. Look for opportunities to ask about feelings and opinions. Some of the best conversations happen in a car with the radio, CD player and cell phone off.

3. Think about your own reactions – are you feeling very stressed and is that being communicated to children? Find ways to relax yourself so that you can stay calm for them.

4. Look for creative ways to deal with stress. For younger children, puppets may help them act out their feelings. Teens could be encouraged to write their thoughts in a journal or diary. Reading books together not only provides valuable family time, but also gives everyone a deeper understanding of world events. Realizing how a character (real or fictional) coped with a disaster, war or difficulty can give lessons that can be emulated.

5. Plan for some exercise or sports activities that can be done together to release tension. From walking to swimming, biking or skating, getting everyone to move more makes a big difference in mental outlook as well.

6. Volunteer together or take a stand together. Look for opportunities in the community in which you can make a difference. Being able to contribute also helps your family or group to bond and understand what your family's and/or group's values are.

7. Try to acknowledge how a child may feel. Taking a child's or teen's concerns seriously, rather than minimizing them, builds a foundation for more open communication.

8. Answer questions honestly, and share what is age appropriate.

9. Don't make a promise that you can't keep. You can't tell your child that a natural disaster or terrorist attack will never affect your family or group. You can say that the chances are very small and that you will do whatever you can to keep everyone safe.

10. Keep tabs on what children are viewing and hearing – at home and at school. Know when to pull the plug on TV, and radio. When the news is on, try to view it together so you can discuss what you have seen and heard.
